blorp

the chair in the relatives' room that's always broken fizzwick

a pen that only works for the person who owns it gromble

the noise the drug trolley makes on a Monday morning snorkel-day

a shift where everyone's off sick except you wuzzle

tape that won't come off the roll plonk

a patient who's been “just about to go home” for six days krimble

the last biscuit nobody will take dribbet

a bleep that goes off the moment you sit down

Eight important terms

Group B. You have 3 minutes. Read the list once. Then fold the right side across to the dotted line, so the meanings are hidden. Look at each word and say its meaning (out loud or in your head). Unfold and check. Fold again and repeat until the time's up.

Fold right side to here

blorp	the chair in the relatives' room that's always broken fizzwick	a pen that only works for the person who owns it gromble	the noise the drug trolley makes on a Monday morning snorkel-day	a shift where everyone's off sick except you wuzzle	tape that won't come off the roll plonk	a patient who's been “just about to go home” for six days krimble	the last biscuit nobody will take dribbet	a bleep that goes off the moment you sit down

Quick: what's a blorp?

Write what each word means. Rough is fine.

Tally (average score out of 8)

	Today (≈10 min)	Day 3 (a week)
Group A: re-read
Group B: self-test

Score 1 per meaning that's roughly right (gist, not exact words).
Expect either result today. Over ~10 minutes, re-reading often does as well as or better than self-testing. Over a week, self-testing usually holds up better (Roediger & Karpicke 2006: re-study won at 5 minutes; testing won at 2 days and 1 week). Small groups are noisy: a demonstration, not a study.
Keep the slips (names on) for Day 3.
