

Answers

- blorp: the chair in the relatives' room that's always broken
- fizzwick: a pen that only works for the person who owns it
- gromble: the noise the drug trolley makes on a Monday morning
- snorkel-day: a shift where everyone's off sick except you
- wuzzle: tape that won't come off the roll
- plonk: a patient who's been “just about to go home” for six days
- krimble: the last biscuit nobody will take
- dribbet: a bleep that goes off the moment you sit down

Tally (average score out of 8)

	Today (≈10 min)
Flat: re-read
Fold: self-test

Score 1 per meaning that's roughly right (gist, not exact words). Expect either result today. Over ~10 minutes, re-reading often does as well as or better than self-testing. Over a week, self-testing usually holds up better (Roediger & Karpicke 2006: re-study won at 5 minutes; testing won at 2 days and 1 week). Small groups are noisy: a demonstration, not a study.

Slips are for today only. Next session (or the last block of a one-day), ask “who remembers what a blorp is?” out loud: no slips.